NATURE NOTE

Red Fox Active at Dawn & Dusk

The common name of this animal, “fox” refers to its crafty behavior. In the twenty-first century, hunters still respect and appreciate foxes for their ability to elude.

While the red fox is a notoriously elusive species, it is well-established here in Missouri. Red fox pups disperse in the fall, traveling an average of 6–14 miles. Foxes are chiefly nocturnal but may come out during the day, especially at dawn and dusk, so you may be able to spot one at Innsbrook during this time of year.

Readily identified by its golden-red coat, black “socks” and white-tipped tail, this sprightly member of the dog family rewards careful observers. However, not all red foxes are red. Members of this species may be red, white, silver (black frosted with white) or cross (reddish brown with a black band down the back and across the shoulders). The color “morph” that shows up depends on location and genetics. All share the distinctive white-tipped tail, and usually a patch of white under the chin. Nearly all red foxes in Missouri have red coats, but cross foxes have occasionally been found. Males and females are colored similarly and young foxes are gray and brown.

Open House Information to be Included in Village Views

We have received several requests that open houses be put back in the Village Views as a service to Innsbrook property owners.

So, in response to their wishes, we have made the decision to allow notification of open houses in the community newsletter.

In order to keep the amount of ads manageable, there will be a fee for posting an open house which will go to the Innsbrook Property Owners Association. Open house notices can only be placed for real estate dwellings that are for sale. The IPOA reserves the right to restrict submissions. Please call extension 180 for additional program information, rates and guidelines.
