nature notes

Red foxes are sometimes difficult to see because they are mainly nocturnal. They may be seen during the day, at dusk and at dawn. These small animals also have been known to climb trees and settle in on the low branches.

Red foxes often have a dog appearance, with a lengthy muzzle and pointed ears. They're best detected by their long bushy tail. In Missouri, nearly all are red in color but it is possible to see black, silver and other color-variations.

These crafty creatures may grow to 12 ½-46 inches in length and weight between seven and 15 pounds. The red fox can run up to 31 MPH and jump more than six feet high.

The fox eats rabbits, mice and rats mainly. On occasion they will eat wild birds or insects. They're solitary yet during the winter courting season, the males will support the female by bringing food for the family to their den which may be a burrow in the ground.

The Missouri Department of Conservation monitors the red fox population to minimize disease among other animals.

DO IT RIGHT ... RECYCLE

The recycling industry has faced significant changes and its affects could result in a loss of service at Innsbrook. With your help in recycling, we can continue to live in harmony with nature and keep services.

Important notes when recycling:

- Please rinse containers.
- Approved paper products include brown paper bags, cardboard and junk mail (even with plastic windows).

As a reminder, dumpster areas are monitored by surveillance cameras. Visit <http://bit.ly/IBKrecycle> for more tips on recycling. Ext. 9180.
