INNSBROOK INSTITUTE

Innsbrook Institute: The High Note

The Innsbrook Institute has been looking at the opportunities before us with a fresh perspective and appreciate this opportunity to connect with each of you as we work together to keep the culture of Innsbrook alive and well, and to create memorable experiences for you to attend with your family, friends, and guests while connecting with others and the arts. We have the unique ability to be part of this rare gem we call Innsbrook, and hope to create experiences and stories we share for generations to come.

Please click on the link or type in the following URL to fill out the survey which will help inform our path forward in 2022: <https://www.surveymonkey.com/r/JYNFP78>.

We appreciate your time and feedback and know that it will continue to help shape the vision and direction of our future endeavors together at Innsbrook! Please contact Christy at director@innsbrookinstitute.org if you have any further questions.

More progress has recently been made on the Faith Through Fire respite home underway at Innsbrook (pictured above). Read more about Innsbrook's Treehouse of Hope by visiting our blog: <https://www.innsbrook-resort.com/blog/P1>

NATURE NOTES

Nature's Winter Coat

When winter winds chill us to the bone, we bundle up in sweaters, down vests and fleece parkas. Wild animals, on the other hand, must endure the cold.

A mammal's fur and its thick layers of fat provide insulation that conserves body heat. Fur is made of two kinds of hair: guard hairs and underfur. Guard hairs are long and glossy and lay over the shorter, duller, downier underfur. Guard hairs waterproof the animal's coat by blocking moisture and keeping the underfur dry. They also protect the underfur from wear. Underfur traps air warmed by the animal's body heat and insulates the animal from the frigid air outside.

In North America, the length and thickness of an animal's fur is greatest sometime between November and March. This winter coat is referred to as "prime," when the animal's fur is prime. Its skin turns blue or creamy white. This occurs because the blood supply to the hair decreases and production of hair pigments stop.

In spring, mammals begin to shed their fur. Some species shed twice a year, in spring and fall, while others shed continuously from early summer through fall.

Winter Survival:

- Adaptations: Some animals such as the deer, elk and bison have adapted to co-exist with the cold, using their hooves and muzzles to clear snow away from plants they need to eat to survive. They also grow thicker, shaggier coats.
- Hibernation: Deep snow can prevent some animals from finding food, but it also acts like a blanket, keeping the ground beneath it warmer than the surrounding air temperature. Some animals take advantage of snow's insulation, and cope with the cold season by building in a protective den or burrow and going into a deep, long sleep, a process called hibernation.
