NATURE NOTES

The Sounds of Fall

Fall is a sensory delight. The landscape is awash with the colors of changing leaves. Sunsets are coppery. Fall smells are evocative: cider, smoke from burning leaves, and the singed pumpkin of a jack-o-lantern plug.

The sounds of fall are distinct too. Crickets call. As E.B. White wrote in "Charlotte's Web": "They sang the song of summer's ending, a sad monotonous song."

Crisp, dead leaves cover the ground and swish and crunch underfoot. Squirrels chatter and raise a leafy rattle as they scurry for acorns to bury and find again as fall fades into winter.

Deer look for mates, and they move restlessly. Bucks vying for dominance fight, and their antlers clack and scrape. A lone deer suddenly surprised is likely to snort. Wild elk chuckle, bugle and sound off in the Ozark hills.

Migrating geese cut across autumn skies in wide V's, belting out calls of reassurance to one another. The chorus of honks fills the chilly air, first softly, then stridently, and then fades away. A new fleet takes up the calm then it passes too, and the relay continues, sometimes for hours.

How can you best enjoy the sounds of fall while gazing at its changing colors? For spectacular vistas, choose routes with views of forested bluffs, and along ridges with sweeping scenes of forested landscapes. Innsbrook offers spectacular views along bluffs, creeks, and lush valleys, with abundant wildlife sightings throughout the property.

On a smaller scale, hike one of the seven walking trails at Innsbrook and experience a colorful forest canopy on a clear, blue-sky day. It's like having acres of shining stained glass above.
